The five primary organizing principles of NARM:

1. Supporting connection and organization
2. Exploring identity
3. Supporting emotional completion
4. Working in present time
5. Supporting re-regulation of all systems of the body

Developed by Dr. Laurence Heller over the course of his 45-year clinical career, The NeuroAffective Relational Model (NARM) is a method of psychotherapy specifically aimed at treating attachment, relational, and developmental trauma, otherwise referred to as complex trauma, complex PTSD, or C-PTSD. This developmentally-oriented, neuroscientifically-informed model emerged out of earlier psychotherapeutic orientations including psychodynamic psychotherapy, attachment theory, gestalt therapy, and diverse somatic psychotherapy approaches. Integrating top-down psychotherapy with bottom-up somatic approaches within a relational context.

NARM holds that while what happened in the past is significant. It is not what happened in the past that creates the symptoms that people experience as adults, it is the persistence of survival styles appropriate to the past that distorts present experience and creates symptoms. These survival patterns, which include dissociation and isolation as the primary coping mechanisms, have outlived their usefulness. This creates ongoing disconnection from our authentic self and from others.

The NARM clinical model has precise and effective techniques for working with the core themes of identity distortion and physiological dysregulation. In the NARM approach, practitioners work simultaneously with the psychology and the physiology of individuals who have experienced developmental trauma and focus on the interplay between issues of identity and the capacity for connection and regulation.

Organizing Developmental Themes

There are five developmental life themes and associated core capacities that are essential to a healthy sense of self, capacity for intimacy, and capacity for emotional and biological regulation.

- Connection - We feel that we belong in the world. We are in touch with our body and our emotions and capable of consistent connection with others.
- Attunement - We have the ability to know what we need and to recognize, reach out for, and take in the abundance that life offers.
- Trust - We have an inherent trust in ourselves and others. We feel safe enough to allow a healthy interdependence with others.
- Autonomy - We are able to say “no” and set limits with others. We speak our mind without guilt or fear.
- Love-Sexuality - Our heart is open, and we are able to integrate a loving relationship with a vital sexuality.

To the degree that these five basic needs are met, we experience ourselves as authentic and develop the capacity for human connection. We feel safe and trusting of our environment, fluid and connected to ourselves and others. We experience a sense of regulation and expansion. To the degree that these basic needs are not met, we become symptomatic and develop survival styles to try to manage the disconnection, distortion of identity, and physiological dysregulation which drive the symptoms.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

After completing this training, attendees will be able to:

1. Review the history and development of the NARM® model of therapy.
2. Discuss NARM's basic assumptions about connection/disconnection.
3. Review NARM's orientation around working with the adaptations to trauma as more primary than the trauma itself.
4. Define NARM's understanding of futuristic memory.
5. Review the first pillar in the NARM approach.
6. Explain the second pillar.
7. Describe NARM's central tenet of agency.
8. Discuss the role of the body in the NARM approach.
9. Discuss the three basic capacities that become distorted in response to developmental trauma.
10. Review the three steps of the emotional completion process.
11. Talk about deconstruction and how that relates to working in the present moment.
12. Describe briefly NARM's model of health.
13. Name the five adaptive survival styles.
14. Discuss the theme of subjectivity as it is understood in NARM.
15. Summarize the non-regressive and non-cathartic orientation in NARM.

ABOUT THE FACILITATOR

Dr. Laurence Heller holds a PhD in psychology and spent more than three decades in private practice, but he is probably best known as the founder of the NeuroAffective Relational Model®. This specialized psychobiological approach to working with developmental trauma is detailed in his bestselling book Healing Developmental Trauma: How Early Trauma Affects Self-Regulation, Self-Image and the Capacity for Relationship, currently available in more than 15 languages. Other titles to Dr. Heller's credit include The Practical Guide for Healing Developmental Trauma: Using the NeuroAffective Relational Model to Address Adverse Childhood Experiences and Resolve Complex Trauma, which he penned with Brad Kammer, and Crash Course, a book on shock trauma co-written with Diane Poole Heller. He speaks several languages fluently and conducts seminars in the NARM approach throughout the United States and Europe. He and his teachers also present NARM world-wide. Dr. Heller is currently working on a project led by Christina Bethell, PhD, a professor at Johns Hopkins Bloomberg School of Public Health, to bring a trauma-informed understanding to pediatricians and general practitioners throughout the US.
